INTRODUCTION

The aim of this third inventory is to offer an outlook of the training organized by each of the 36 IMISCOE Research Network members in 2014-2015 and of the ongoing research projects regarding international migration and ethnic studies. Data of the third inventory (June 2013, by Sonia Gsir – CEDEM) have been updated. First, it is worth to note that in the last year the following institutes have joined the IMISCOE Research Network as new members:

- AMIS, Centre for Advanced Migration Studies, University of Copenhagen
- CEMyRI, Center for the Study of Migration and Intercultural Relations, University of Almeria
- COMPAS, Centre on Migration, Policy and Society, University of Oxford
- HIVA, Research Institute for Work and Society, KU Leuven
- ISF, Institute for Social Research Oslo, Norway
- ISMU, Iniziative e Studi sulla Multietnicità, Milan
- MACIMIDE, Maastricht Centre for Citizenship, Migration and Development, Maastricht University
- MDX, Middlesex University, London
- MPI-MMG, Max Planck Institute for the Study of Religious and Ethnic Diversity, University of Göttingen
- MPI Europe, Migration Policy Institute Europe, Brussels

Moreover, on April 1st 2014 the coordination of the IMISCOE network has moved to Erasmus University. To celebrate the transfer, a minisymposium was held on March 27th on the future research agenda of IMISCOE. Amongst others Rainer Baubock, Rinus Penninx, Elizabeth Collett, Izabela Grabowska, Andreas Pott, Marco Martiniello and Pieter Bevelander shed their light on future opportunities for the network. The transfer to Erasmus University was formalised during a special Board of Directors meeting on March 28th. The new Network Office in Rotterdam will be led by Maurice Crul (director) and Peter Scholten (Associate Director). Cees Jochemsen, Warda Belabas and Karin Milovanovic will be the new network officers.

An important fact occurred in August 2014 is that IMISCOE has closed an agreement with Springer for publishing the IMISCOE Book Series and the Journal Comparative Migration Studies. This agreement allows IMISCOE to take a new step in developing its publication series, which had been first established in 2004. In more detail, among the provisions included in the agreement we here report that Springer will publish around 6 to 10 IMISCOE Books per year in Open Access as well as non-OA books, depending on the choice of the authors. IMISCOE will also continue supporting Open Access books with an IMISCOE OA-Subsidy for IMISCOE members. Furthermore, the IMISCOE Editorial Committee will maintain editorial autonomy over reviewing and accepting book manuscript, and so will the Editorial Board of the Journal CMS. All members of IMISCOE will receive full membership access to all manuscripts of (OA as well as non-OA) IMISCOE books via a pass-word protected link at the IMISCOE-website. This will make all books (except the IMISCOE text books that have been published with AUP) available for IMISCOE members. Last, Springer and IMISCOE will make a joint investment in the development of the journal CMS for the coming period, enabling the journal to maintain its Open Access publishing strategy without asking Article Processing Fees for a period of at least two years. The book agreement is effective until mid 2018; the agreement for the journal began in January 2015 for a three year period.

Among the forthcoming activities, the IMISCOE Standing Committee on Popular Art, Diversity and Cultural Policies in Post-Migration Urban Settings is organizing a seminar on “Inclusion of immigrants in the cultural policy mainstream: Identifying approaches and challenges” to be held on September 21, 2015 in Barcelona.

The Academic Coordinators of the seminar are: Marco Martiniello (CEDEM, Liège), Wiebke Sievers (ISR, Vienna), and Ricard Zapata-Barrero (GRITIM-UPF, Barcelona).

This report has been realized upon the request of the Training Committee of the IMISCOE Research Network. It is based on data collected through a questionnaire which has been sent to each director of the 36 institutes/centres IMISCOE members (See Annex). In the end, 20 questionnaires were collected, thus providing enough data to describe the current trainings programs available within the IMISCOE Research Network and giving an idea of its dynamics in terms of research. As far as the IMISCOE members who did not fill in the questionnaire are concerned, they just appear in the overview table that shows which kind of training activities member institutes implement. When not available through the questionnaire, this information has been collected through the websites of the centres, where in the best case, the information is reliable, complete and up to date; in the worst case, it is out-of-date or partial. In several cases, the information is not available in English. Some parts of the overview table are incomplete: this means that the information was not available online or not updated.

The inventory is composed of tables that provide an overview and elements of comparison. It can be read in various ways. The objective was to be as precise as possible in providing the main elements regarding training and research. In most cases, the address of a website is given. When the information was not available at all, the table cell is empty. It is important to note that the objective of the inventory was not to compare the members' activities but rather to present them together.

The inventory is divided in two parts: EDUCATION and RESEARCH. The first part presents the masters and PhD programs related to migration and ethnic studies. It also aims at offering an overview of the other trainings in migration studies targeting postgraduate students (summer or winter courses, continuing training) and prospective trainings. The second part lists the current research projects on international migration and related issues. These two parts are preceded by an overview table. This table gives, at a glance, the training offered and current research activities among the 36 IMISCOE members. The sign * beside the name (such as DEUSTO*) indicates that the information came from the questionnaire, completed by the respondents. The sign ✓ indicates that the training / activity is organized at the concerned centre, the sign ✗ indicates that it is not organized. When the space is empty, it means that no information was found to say precisely whether or not a training / activity is developed. Finally, the annexes include a list of current PhD theses on migration and ethnic issues and a copy of the questionnaire.

Although this inventory is not complete, it gives an idea of the current education and the training capacities of the IMISCOE Research Network and it provides also an updated list of current research and doctoral research. Some members offer a joint MA programme in the framework of the Erasmus Mundus Programme, such as the Master in International Migration and Social Cohesion (MISOCO). Another joint master program in Immigration Studies is offered by the CEDEM and the GRITIM. We also find several PhD Programmes as well as MA degrees and other trainings with a migration studies track. As in the last years, the great number and variety of research projects and doctoral research projects conducted in the field of migration and ethnic studies confirms the growing interest on these issues in Europe.

This report has been realized between February and May 2015 and was completed on the 15 MAY 2015.

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

Education

The inventory is divided into tables. The box below presents briefly the five tables related to training.

MASTERS IN MIGRATION STUDIES
At least 8 masters in migration and ethnic studies are organized by the same number of IMISCOE institutes. They privilege a multidisciplinary approach. Some masters are professionally oriented with policy or project design and immigration management, others are more specialized in research focusing on in-depth analysis, qualitative and quantitative methodology and they more directly prepare students to a research career. Most masters are organized in English and some offer the possibility to also chose another language, depending on the location of the studies. About the duration of the programmes, it can vary from one to two years; this is also related to a part-time or full-time engagement of the student. Among the offered programmes, an online master to sustain distance learning. The admission criteria vary but in most of the cases applicants must hold a Bachelor's degree preferably in social or political sciences, law or humanities but not exclusively. In some cases, the programme is open to other disciplines or to a previous relevant work experience.
MASTERS WITH A MIGRATION STUDIES TRACK
Data from the questionnaire allows us to look at 8 examples of masters with a migration and ethnic studies track organized by 4 IMISCOE institutes. There are masters in sociology, anthropology, or in other more specific domains such as International Development Aid or humanitarian rights or action and globalization with a focus on interdisciplinarity. They are organized in English or in association with another language. The duration is between one year and two years. Opportunity of outside courses is available. Applicants must hold a Bachelor's degree in social sciences and some other disciplines or 5 years professional experience.
PhD PROGRAMMES
At least 10 PhD programmes are available in the IMISCOE Research Network, among them some have a strong focus on migration and ethnic studies; in other cases they offer opportunities to address these subjects through PhD training such as thematic doctoral school. Joint supervision is often available. Admission criteria vary and generally applicants must hold a Master's degree.
OTHER TRAININGS IN MIGRATION STUDIES
At least 16 other trainings are available in 9 IMISCOE institutes. They consist of Summer or Winter schools, online courses, seminars and also of a research training programme. The format varies from a day to two weeks of intensive courses or even to a longer period (from 12 to 36 months in the case of the research training programme). Some courses target exclusively Ma or PhD students and others are open to a wider audience. Some trainings are organized in collaboration with other organizations.

PLANNED TRAININGS

At least 5 institutes have planned to organize further training such as Master programme, Summer Courses or other different training paths.

Research

Part II of the inventory lists the current research projects carried out by the 36 IMISCOE members. The focus is on research projects on migration and ethnic studies. The research of the institutes is wider in reality and in typologies, varying from doctoral research to broader programmes. The aim of this part of the inventory was not to give an exhaustive account of all the research activities carried out but rather to give an overview of the current research undertaken by each institute. In the table related to research projects, the following indications are provided: name and acronym of the project - main objectives – funding body – duration in years of the project – name of the person responsible of following the project in the institute (supervisor) – email address of a contact person or/and address of the website of the project. Around 215 research projects have been carried on or launched during the academic year 2014-2015. Some of them – in particular European projects - involved several members of the IMISCOE Research Network.

The annexes also contain a list of current PhD students by institutions. The title of the thesis, the discipline concerned, the supervisor, the current year of the research and the funding body involved are listed. There are around 240 PhD theses ongoing in the IMISCOE Research Network during the academic year 2014-2015.

PART I: EDUCATION

1. MASTERS IN MIGRATION STUDIES
	CEDEM
Title	Double deegree in immigration Studies
General and specific objectives	This new Master programme provides students with a unique opportunity to combine political science and sociology approaches to immigration studies into a double degree. Students will graduate with a Master Degree in Sociology from the University of Liège and a Master Degree in Immigration Management from the Universitat Pompeu Fabra in Barcelona. They will spend a year in each University so that they will get a chance to observe migration and diversity dynamics in two different diverse urban contexts. The programme combines theoretical insights with practical tools and is taught by renown experts and practitioners, in an inter-disciplinary perspective. It includes courses related to the politics, economics, law and sociology of migration. The programme seeks to train: ▪ Migration experts in NGOs, foundations, development banks and agencies, and other not-for-profit organisations; ▪ Junior professional officers for international institutions such as the International Organisation for Migration (IOM), the UN High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) or the International Labor Office (ILO); ▪ Migration and diversity managers for government, development agencies and local authorities; ▪ Researchers for academic institutions, think-tanks and NGOs; ▪ Specialised journalists and diplomats. Students have the opportunity to follow a bilingual program (French-English) or a full English program. Students wishing to do a Bilingual program (French-English) in Immigration Studies register with the University of Liège for the first year and follow classes mostly in French. They then do their second year fully in English in Barcelona. Students wishing to do a full English program register with Pompeu Fabra University for the first year and do their second year in English at the University of Liège (more details on the full English program here) The Master Thesis will be written under supervision of UPF Barcelona or ULg. The second reader will automatically be someone at the other institution. The Master Thesis will be defended and qualified by the home university of the student during the second year of the double master program. The counterpart university will recognise the ECTS and the qualification obtained by the student. Liège values the Master Thesis of 18 ECTS whereas UPF Barcelone values the Master Thesis of 21 ECTS. In order to recognise the Master Thesis qualified in Liège (18 ECTS) at UPF barcelona (21 ECTS), Liège double degree students must follow an extra research work credited of 3 ECTS and delivered by UPF Barcelona.

Admission criteria	A university degree of minimum 180 ECTS (Bachelor and/or Master) in a -preferably - relevant discipline, such as sociology, political science, human geography law, humanities or health sciences, or plan to graduate no later than on September 1st of the current year. Title	Official master's degree in contemporary international migration (online)
General and specific objectives	The Official Master's Degree in International Migration is an official postgraduate degree in the University Institute of Studies on Migrations (Instituto Universitario de Estudios sobre Migraciones or IUEM, in Spanish) at the Universidad Pontificia Comillas, which is taught as an on-line master , distance-learning course by means of internet, with blended-learning system (on one in campus classes in the month of February) The Official Master's Degree in International Migration has been adapted to the European Space for Higher Education laid forth with a multi-disciplinary focus, placing the emphasis on the analysis of migration from a perspective that combines social and legal fields. A well-rounded training of students is enhanced by carrying out internships in public or private entities, which allows the individual to come into contact with the current state of immigration. In short, the creation of this official university degree has been based on the social interest, high demand from students and professional scope.

Admission criteria	Who this degree aimed at: All types of university graduates who wish to acquire or improve professional skills in the field of international contemporary migration. Those students who wish to develop their research skills in this field. This is an Official Master's Degree with professional skills, which also attempts to initiate students in research and, if applicable, to allow access to the specific Doctoral Degree in the field.
ECTS	Official Master's Degree in International Migration (Online Blended-learning) The 60 ECTS in the program are broken down among: 44 ECTS coursework through modules. The Master's modules split between one phase with shared subjects and a second specialisation phase for students seeking more in-depth knowledge on either the social or the legal fields covered. The first two blocks of shared subjects (18 ECTS) aim to provide students with an appropriate level of proficiency in the basic areas comprising the phenomenon of migration.
Duration	Full time in one academic year . Part time in two academic years.
Language	The Master can be taught in English or Spanish, depending on the student's choice.
Specifications	blended-learning methodology: The program is based on blended-learning methodology, which combines online learning with in-person intensive sessions during one week in the month of February.

2. MASTERS WITH A MIGRATION STUDIES TRACK

	CEDEM
Title	Master in anthropology with a track on migration studies: module “worlds on move, migration and post-migratory dynamics”
General and specific objectives	Built upon theoretical and methodological foundations in human sciences, the master aims to supply students with adequate intellectual tools to decode the social and cultural dynamics at work in today's world. Consequent to the reading of original texts, the thematic courses focus on the exchange of questions and answers in such a way as to encourage students to think for themselves. The ability to see the world from a different perspective is considered a major part of the programme. Special importance is given to real-world experience, allowing students - among other benefits - to ponder upon the anthropologist's position and role. The students learn how to master the research methods by the setting up of a collective survey at Liège. This experience is then developed on an individual level, across several classes and the research for the master's thesis.

Title	Doctorate in Human Rights: ethical, social and political challenges.
General and specific objectives	The PhD programme in Human Rights: Ethical, Social and Political Challenges is a multidisciplinary programme which aims to provide an advanced transversal research framework within the field of human rights. The programme focuses on finding answers to challenges in the field of social justice through research. The three research groups working on this programme concentrate their work in the following main areas: International migrations, integration and social cohesion; Human rights, cultural diversity and identities; Human rights, conflicts and humanitarian action; Analysis of social values; Social welfare; Development and social transformation; Conflicts and cultures of peace. The PhD programme is organised as a means to fulfil the commitment to promote social justice with human rights as the reference framework. The aims of the programme are: To generate knowledge about challenges in the field of human rights from an interdisciplinary perspective that contributes to the international debate on these issues; To train researchers of excellence so that they are not only prepared to pursue academic careers, but also to serve society in our country/or their home countries as highly qualified researchers. To foster knowledge on European experiences and perspectives based both on their own internal transformations and on their implications in other regions across the world. To disseminate the generated knowledge through networks and publications, thus establishing the necessary links to help to direct political action and promote social and humanitarian development.
Admission criteria	Candidates are required to comply with the PhD programme entry requirements as established under Spanish Law (see General admission criteria for further information). They must also have a background in fields of knowledge related to the Social Sciences, Legal Sciences, Humanities or Human Rights, Social Values or Applied Ethics or they plan to embark on research in one of the programme's priority areas. Specific admission criteria: Students applying to this PhD programme must hold an undergraduate degree or its equivalent and an official Master's degree. Candidates must have completed one of the following qualifications to enter this programme: An official Spanish university degree, having earned a minimum of 300 ECTS, at least 60 ECTS of which correspond to a Master's degree. An official Spanish undergraduate degree, having earned at least 300 ECTS. In this latter case, additional courses will be required. Foreign university degree, prior verification that the studies are equivalent to official Spanish Master's degree qualifications.

	University graduates, candidates with degrees in architecture or engineering with the Diploma in Advanced Studies. Other PhD degrees. A level of C1 is required in Spanish and English. ☑ Priority will be given to students who have completed an official Master's degree related to the lines of research recognised by the University of Deusto and which this PhD programme is based on. Other achievements shown on the CV will also be recognised: students who have received grants from Spanish or international bodies, based on evaluation of their CVs; continuing education courses related to this specialist area of knowledge; work or volunteering in this field; research experience in the field, prior to entering the programme.

Title	Political and Social Sciences (one of the Research lines is Immigration & Cultural Diversity)
General and specific objectives	The formation and training of high quality Political and Social Science researchers and analysts. Formation of specialists in the areas of knowledge and research of the Department. That is, Political Science, Public administration and Sociology. Developing innovative research in the Department's different research areas. Developing general competences that increase the occupational opportunities of future doctors.
Admission criteria	In order to be admitted to Political and Social Sciences PhD Programme offered by UPF, candidates must provide accreditation that they have obtained an accredited undergraduate degree (Bachelor degree or recognised equivalent degree from an accredited Higher Education Institution). Moreover, they have to proof that they have obtained or are in position to obtain an accredited graduate/master's degree in the field of Social Sciences (equivalent to a Spanish Master Universitario/Oficial, Master's of Research....) which enables them to access a Phd programme in their home country. In order to access a doctoral programme at UPF, you need to have completed 300 ECTS credits, 60 of those have to correspond to an official graduate, research orientated master's programme. Once students have completed the Oficial Masters Programme, which represents a taught training period, access to the PhD programme represents the start of the research period that culminates with the reading of the thesis. During the first year of research, the student is expected to prepare a detailed and sound thesis project and defend it before an evaluation commission. This way, from the second year onwards, the student can advance in his or her research having a clear topic, hypothesis and methodology to follow. The requirement to define the research project in the first year should permit completion of the Thesis during the subsequent 3 years, hence it is expected that students invest a total of four years (one to prepare the project and 3 to complete it).

ECTS
Duration	The Thesis Project must be approved by the end of the second academic year in the PhD Programme. The Doctoral Thesis itself must be read before the end of the third academic year following acceptance of the Thesis Project on a full time basis, and before the end of the sixth academic year if registered part time.

Title	Official Doctorate Program In International Migration And Development Cooperation
General and specific objectives	The University Institute for Studies on Migrations at the Universidad Pontificia Comillas has a long-standing tradition in multi-disciplinary studies in the phenomenon of international migrations, which has had an impact on the doctoral program in International Migration and Development Cooperation, offered now for several years. This program has now been adapted to the new guidelines for postgraduate teaching and a new area for work on international cooperation for development has been added. In sum, the University Institute for Studies on Migrations attempts to contribute to research of these phenomena, which may be termed "sine ira et studio", examining them from the perspective of the great issues which have arisen throughout the historical development of the studies, and from the perspective of political philosophy, which may also be used in analysis. The possibilities for legal regulation and for determining factors of a social, cultural and economic nature are also taken into account. Only by looking at issues through this light can we avoid falling into biased perceptions, idealizations, and opportunistic analyses that impede full understanding with an objective perspective. The Doctorate Program in International Migration and Development Cooperation provide advanced training for researchers from a multidisciplinary perspective that fosters analysis of migrations and cooperation for development in all its facets. It also allows specialization in either one of the fields of study that comprises its content and/or correlation between both.

Admission criteria	Entrance Requirements: - University Master - Have completed 300 ECTS credits, of which at least 60 ECTS have master level. - Doctoral Courses In addition, admission to the doctoral program may make the demand of specific complementary training.

Title	Integration and International Migration: pathways and Integration Policies (INTEGRIM).
General and specific objectives	The INTEGRIM research training programme aims to establish a multi-site network of early stage researchers (predominantly PhD students) at the eight partner institutions fostering a multidisciplinary research career on International Migration and Integration within the European context. The main features can be described as follows: (1) provide high quality research training on integration policies and processes in the European Union and neighbouring countries. It aims to enhance the quality of the existing knowledge of scholars, policy makers, practitioners, economic actors and civil society dealing with integration. (2) contribute to the creation of an international inter-sectoral and multidisciplinary critical mass on the politics of integration and more specifically on cultural and identity management, citizenship and political participation, labour and social integration and urban integration, residential patterns and mobility. (3) enrich the political and social debate through a transnational multidisciplinary analysis on the causes and conditions leading to migrant integration and economic, social and territorial cohesion. The network aims to bring together key actors with proven experience and knowledge of integration policies and processes from academic, enterprise, civil society and public backgrounds. (4) provide EU policy makers and practitioners with qualitative and quantitative scientific tools to inform their decision making and implementation processes on the four indicated integration policy areas. The proposed programme aims to contribute to the EU's integration agenda on the basis of the coherent approach to integration pursued at EU level and fostered by the European Commission.

Admission criteria	To be eligible, each researcher must simultaneously fulfill the following criteria at the time of appointment: General Eligibility Criteria (pre-selection): • Nationality: the researcher may be of any nationality. • Mobility: at the time of appointment, the researcher may not have resided or carried out his/her main activity in the country of the beneficiary for more than 12 months in the 3 years immediately prior to his/her recruitment under the project. • Qualifications and research experience: the researcher must fulfill the requirements associated with Early Stage Researchers as defined in Article III.1: Early stage researchers: means researchers in the first 4 years (full-time equivalent) of their research careers, including the period of research training, starting at the date of obtaining the degree which would formally entitle them to embark on a doctorate either in the country in which the degree was obtained or in the country in which the initial training activities are provided, irrespective whether or not a doctorate is envisaged. • Linguistic competence: Accreditation of minimum European C1 English level supported either through an official degree or through the accreditation of at least two years of higher education in English. Title	Enigma Summer School: 'Enhancing Georgia's Migration Management' (ENIGMMA)
General and specific objectives	The programme of the one-week Summer School will provide research-oriented, multidisciplinary and innovative academic courses on issues related to the migration situation and policy in Georgia. Teaching will be accompanied by research work and discussions. During the Summer School the project academia experts will provide an overview on different migration areas. The participants of the Summer School will have the opportunity to present and discuss their research projects undertaken in preparation to the Summer School. In addition, discussions and workshops during the Summer School will be used to finalise these research projects. The most successful students will have a possibility to publish their research paper in the Summer School reader and also to receive an unpaid internship within state institutions, involved in migration management, in Georgia (in case of availability of internship places).
Admission criteria	The Summer School will accept a maximum of 20 participants from Georgia and 10 representatives of Georgian diaspora, who must be specialised/have experience in migration issues related to law (including international relations, security and human rights) (1), economy (2), demography (3) and/or media (4). Students within the Master studies programme of the relevant disciplines, representatives of government agencies working on migration and civil society organisations are encouraged to participate. Participants should undertake migration related research in preparation of the Summer School after they have been selected to participate in the event: either in their studies on a Master's degree level or at their work. The deadline for application is 10 April 2015.

Title	Migration Management Diploma Programme (MMDP)
General and specific objectives	The Migration Management Degree Programme (MMDP), offered by UNU-MERIT and the Maastricht Graduate School of Governance, is designed for government officials with experience in the field of migration and asylum. It is also open to other practitioners and students interested in the management of migration and asylum policies. Running for three months, the course uses a range of teaching and evaluation methods including lectures and interactive sessions with participants. Special attention is paid to hands-on practical exercises, notably via the Problem Based Learning (PBL) method. The MMDP aims to develop not only theoretical knowledge but also practical skills such as articulation and presenting; how to write briefs, policy notes and memoranda; how to formulate evidence-based policy; and how to work in a group and deal with conflicting interests. Also on the agenda are seminars devoted to health, education and institutions, as well as scenario building sessions focusing on country case studies. In the scenario building sessions, participants create migration scenarios for their own countries, which have proven to be of great help when forming policy. Overall the course will equip participants with a range of new skills and insights, as well as practical and interactive experiences of how to apply the latest knowledge in the field of migration management.

Title	Online Course: Migration and Remittances Effects
General and specific objectives	This course is geared towards practitioners in the field but is also open to other types of students interested in learning more about migration studies. Students receive weekly assignments and online lectures. Some of the issues that are touched upon in this class are: Is migration good or bad for the migrant receiving country? What effects does it have on the sending country? What about the money migrants send back to their home countries? Does this have only positive effects? How can we evaluate migration and development? We will look at effects on both ends of migration and on different levels. Special attention is paid to labour market issues in the receiving country and development issues in the sending country.

Title	Online Course: Comparative Migration Policy
General and specific objectives	This course is geared towards practitioners in the field but is also open to other types of students interested in learning more about migration studies. Students receive weekly assignments and online lectures. Migration policy has been of increasing interest in public debates in most developed countries recently. It is the talk of political parties and a subject in new elections. In this course we explore migration entry policies for different types of migrants across different receiving countries. The sending policies of origin countries are also studied: do they encourage or discourage migrations and from which groups? On the other side, we look at the policies of migrant sending countries to engage their diaspora and how diaspora can play a role in development.

CEDEM	Post-colonial studies in Belgium	This research program aims to ask the question of post-colonial Belgium and even to open a field of study highlighting existing work, but disparate, especially by making an empirical inventory. This will be developed around two main axes: the postcolonial imaginary, on the one hand, and post-colonial claims on the other. Determining, in the field of migration, the dynamics and post-colonial logics will allow, at the local level, to highlight process which are ‘unvisibilized’ by the lack of theoretical relevance of the subject in the academic field. Free movement of workers and transitional arrangements: lessons from the 2004 and 2007 enlargements	The main objective of the project is to answer the question to what extent the selective application of transitional periods has influenced the scale and structural features of migratory flows between the NMS and the EU. 				particular, the study aims at: (1) assessing the rationale behind the decisions to open or restrict the labour market access to workers from the NMS; (2) identifying the main drivers of scale and distribution of post-enlargement mobility flows and assessing the role of the legal regime (e.g. transitional arrangements); (3) analyzing the impact of changes in the legal regime on the economic, labour market and social impacts of post-enlargement mobility flows on destination countries; (4) identifying the potential side effects or circumventions of restrictions (e.g. increase in irregular migration or bogus self-employment); and (5) looking at the potentially self-regulating nature of labour mobility across EU Member States (with a particular emphasis on the economic crisis and its outcomes). 	Transnational Migration, Citizenship and the Circulation of Rights and Responsibilities (TRANSMIC)	‘Transnational Migration, Citizenship and the Circulation of Rights and Responsibilities’ (TRANSMIC) is a project funded under the European Commission’s Marie Curie actions. This Initial Training Network will run from 1 September 2014 to 31 August 2018. The aim of the project is to contribute to the understanding of transnational migration, in particular by looking at the conditions for and effects of transnational migration, possibilities for the mobility of migrants’ rights to be enhanced, and the links between migration, citizenship, and migration and development. In the framework of the TRANSMIC project, the Centre of Migration Research is responsible for a supervision of one Ph.D. researcher working on a project titled “Temporalities of Irregular Migration: the	European Commission’s Marie Curie actions	2014-2018	Paweł Kaczmarczyk on behalf of CMR	Maastricht University (The Netherlands), University of Liège (Belgium), University of Minho (Portugal), Oxford University (UK), University of Aix-Marseille (France), University of Tampere (Finland), The Centre for European Policy Studies (CEPS) in Brussels. 	Disengagement from the state - the perspective of Russian regions	This project aims at identifying the patterns and deepening knowledge on factors influencing the spatial diversity of economic, social and political practices of population which are manifestations of disengagement from the state in post-communist countries. The research will focus on studying Russia – the biggest and one of the most internally diverse countries in the world. Disengagement from the state is understood as the process of limiting interactions between the society and the state and its institutions. It concerns various spheres of contact	National Science Center, PRELUDIUM	2014-2016	Zuzanna Brunarska		Zuzanna Brunarska zuzanna.brunarska@uw.edu.pl / http://www.migracje.uw.edu.pl/projekt/2379/between the state and the society and may be characterized by a range of economic, social and political practices of population. The research hypothesis assumes that significant regional differences as regards intensity and pattern of coexistence of disengagement practices are observed in Russia, in particular differences between regions differing in the degree of autonomy within the Russian Federation, level of peripherality and ethnic composition are visible.

Substitutability of internal and international migrations of people	The main research objective of the proposed project is the verification of the hypothesis of the substitutability of internal and international migration in a new theoretical context and by means of innovative empirical approaches, unseen in the few existing studies. For the purpose of	National Science Centre, Preludium grant	2014-2016	Joanna Nestorowicz	Joanna Nestorowicz j.nestorowicz@uw.edu.pl / http://www.migracje.uw.edu.pl/projekt/2275/this study the understanding of the notion of substitutability will be twofold. The first definition corresponds to the one classically considered in the field of economics, i.e. to substitutability as a characteristic of two competing goods or services (here - rather strategies) which are the subject of a rational individuals' decision-making process. The second understanding of substitutability is related to macrostructural interdependencies between the two forms of mobility, analyzed in the form of aggregates such as the scale of internal and international migration flows. The research undertaken within the proposed project aim at formulating conclusions on a possibly universal level. Thus, first, part of the study involves an accurate systematization of literature concerning the subject research in the field of migration studies. Second, the empirical analyses carried out within the project will be related to three countries, each representing a different geographical, historical, economic and political setting in which mobility occurs, i.e. Poland, China and the US. Third, the project will apply an experimental method to determine the significance and meaning of an international border for individuals' preferences towards labor mobility.

	UPSTREAM. Developing Effective Strategies for the Mainstreaming of Integration Governance	The project analyses how, why and to what effect governments at the EU, national and local level mainstream their migrant integration policies. It aims to promote a learning process in terms of policy coordination, practices and outcomes in the governance of migrant integration. It asks the central question 'What are the obstacles and opportunities that	National Science Centre, Preludium grant	2014-2015	Joanna Nestorowicz	Joanna Nestorowicz (on behalf of CMR) j.nestorowicz@uw.edu.pl / https://projectupstream.wordpress.com/

		mainstreaming generates in terms of migrant integration policies and outcomes?'. Besides an EU case, five country cases are selected: the UK, Spain, the Netherlands, France and Poland. These are countries with different governance structures in the domain of integration, ranging from the highly centralized in France, to moderately decentralized in the Netherlands and strongly devolved in the UK. In addition, Spain and Poland as new immigration countries are developing migrant integration policies against a very different background, with many local (and regional) initiatives. The country cases involve an analysis of national policies and policies in two cities. Our main goal is to analyze how immigrant associations in Spain and their users integrate ICTs into the development of their work, by comparing different associations according to their national origin. Our main research questions are: To what extent are immigrant associations in Spain integrating ICTs into their work and their members/users? 		between the state, the market and the family. The basic dimensions explaining the tendencies towards the commoditisation of assistance (the market as the main provider of care in the home) or towards familism (propensity towards care work carried by close relatives) will be, on one hand, the philosophy for the implementation of social resources and money transfers in the framework of the Law for the Promotion of Personal Autonomy and Attention to People on a Dependency Situation (LAPAD as Spanish acronym) and, on the other hand, the existence of a culture of care which has the family as its roots and within the family, women as the basic care providers who have the main option of outsource this task into domestic work. 					and municipal, therefore the care provision depends on the decisions and priorities established by the regional governments, which are also conditioned by other factors such as the culture of care, the access of women to the labour market, the extension of a private market of personal attention. This latter process is highly influenced by the migratory model of each region, since female migrants hired as domestic workers are those carrying the care work in recent years. The diversity of all these factors in each region justifies the inclusion of each of them in the analysis and shows the need of running a regional comparative analysis. This aims to fulfil three general aims. First of all, to classify the regions according to the interrelation between social policies in the framework of long term care (towards the elderly), the extension of private care workers in the households of the elderly and the repercussion of the access to the labour market of women. Secondly, we will study the extension and diversity of the different types of attention offered in the private market, particularly developed around domestic work sector through the hiring of female domestic workers as care workers, since this is the main option for families to provide this care. Thirdly, we will estimate the capacity of the regional markets to extend the job offers linked to the care activities in the households. The methodology to be used will look for a complementary between qualitative and quantitative methods. In depth interviews will be carried out to identify the family strategies in the care provision, the segmentation of the care private labour market and the political management of the social resources of the LAPAD. The quantitative analysis will be based on secondary data on the municipal registers and census describing the socio-economic indicators of these regions and allow us to classify through statistical modelling the diverse social organization of care and quantify the private employment growth within this sector.

	Gender, transnationalism, and inter-generational strategies of social mobility	The general aim of this research project is to study the transnational social mobility strategies and trajectories of immigrant families in Spain. We will look into the way households negotiate family social mobility strategies, by analysing the actions individuals choose in order to climb social ladders, as well as the series of personal and collective itineraries they undertake within the social hierarchy and the transnational social space.	Ministry of Economy and Competitiveness	2010-2014	Laura Oso Casas	Autonomous University of Barcelona, Complutense University of Madrid, University of Miguel Hernández de Elche (Alicante)	Laura Oso Casas osofac@udc.es / www.esomi.es

					Our analysis will be based on an intergenerational and gender perspective. What is the impact of migrants' transnational social and economic strategies on their social mobility trajectories? And on those of their children? How do they differ in terms of gender? Do some transnational strategies represent social stagnation for some household members, yet revert on the other ones in the form of upward social mobility? The hypothesis put forward here is that households adapt social mobility strategies that include capital investment decisions (of a financial, physical, human or social nature) that do not necessarily imply a positive gain or benefit for all. Indeed, channelling efforts towards the accumulation of a certain type of (physical) capital may mean a step backwards in other capital (of a human or social nature) and vice versa. Furthermore, they may not lead to similar social mobility trajectories for all members of the family. The theoretical approach adopted for the purpose of our study lies within the framework of literature on gender and migration transnationalism and social mobility, as well as on research on second generations. We will apply a comparative methodology based on the triangulation of both data production techniques (namely, documentary analysis, analysis of secondary statistical studies, in-depth interviews and family life stories) and data analysis (multivariable quantitative analysis and category-based thematic discourse analysis). The fieldwork in Spain will be mainly conducted in Madrid, Catalonia, Valencia and Galicia. A fieldwork will be also carried out in some of the migrants' countries of origin (Equator, Morocco and Argentina/Brazil).

Since the Law came into force on the 19th December 2008, more than 300 thousand descendants of Spanish emigrants have applied and half a million applications are expected by December 2011.This research project aims to study the reasons for claiming Spanish citizenship, as well as the projects, either migratory or sedentary, of the naturalized. This hypothesis is backed up by the clash of a certain gender levelling pursued by the grandmothers' migration with the legal discrimination supported by the LMH; e) to identify the distinctive features of the Spaniards generated by the LMH as regards their migratory and electoral behaviour with regard to their ascendants, explaining the impact of the acquisition of EU citizenship

They develop transnational business, trade, investments, or social and cultural programmes and circulate between their two countries. ITHACA aims to explore the interconnections between the integration process and transnational mobility of migrants by answering three key questions: To what extent, and in what ways, do integration conditions in the country of destination encourage transnational mobility? What are the conditions in the country of origin that encourage transnational mobility? What type of transfers take place through the transnational mobility of migrants? To study these questions, ITHACA examines the links between integration and transnational mobility in regard to four countries of destination (Austria, Italy,

Ethnic differences in labour market participation, health and sickness absence among parents caring for disabled or chronically ill children	The aim of this project is to investigate how mothers and fathers caring for chronically ill or disabled children balance work and care, and how this extra "burden" may influence parents' health, well-being, labour market attachment and sickness absence. The project will particularly contribute with more knowledge about how immigrant families from different countries are affected by having chronically ill or disabled children, and we will study how gender, occupation and education is associated with strategies and patterns of balancing work and care, and how this affects the parents' sickness absence. The project has a qualitative and a quantitative component. Comparative Research on Assisted Voluntary Return and Reintegration (AVRR)	This project aims to inform policies and programmes for assisting the voluntary return and reintegration of migrants, including irregular migrants and unsuccessful asylum seekers. This aim will be achieved via three objectives: (1) analysis of the migrant return decision, including factors that motivate or impede irregular migrants from returning voluntarily; (2) development of a framework for defining and measuring sustainability of approaches to voluntary return and reintegration; and (3) an assessment of what factors determine sustainable return and reintegration. Routes to Europe	This project, commissioned by the WODC, reviews irregular migrants routes to Europe. This review will comprehensively examine both the primary routes or irregular entry and the determinants of irregular migration to Europe and the Netherlands in particular.		2014-2015			Melissa Siegel melissa.siegel@maastrichtuniversity.nl UNU-MERIT and the Maastricht Graduate School of Governance
Irregular Migrants' Decision Making Factors in Transit	This project examines how irregular migrants decide to: 1) stay in a country of transit; 2) pursue onward migration; or 3) return to their country of origin? It also considers how conditions in transit and policy settings influence individual decision making? Fieldwork will be conducted in Turkey and Greece to address these questions in 2015. 	Entrepreneurship and Migration	The mobility of talent has become a significant determinant of economic growth and development over the past two decades, and will increase in importance in the future. The key issue is whether more migration – and more mobile talent – will result in innovative entrepreneurship that can address the complications from rapid migration, urbanization, and whether innovative entrepreneurship will indeed be stimulated to make use of the opportunities that migration create. If policies, systems and infrastructure do not take the (changing) relationship between migration and entrepreneurship into consideration, the result could be that mobile talent end up allocated towards survivalist, non-productive or even destructive entrepreneurial activities, including gangsterism,	TRANSMIC			Niels Philipsen (TRANSMIC project manager) Faculty of Law niels.philipsen@maastrichtuniversity.nl / http://law.maastrichtuniversity.nl/transmic/?page_id=181 protection arrangements, whether in migrant sending or receiving societies. Formalised rights to social welfare are essentially a matter of national legislation grounded in assumptions of a relatively sedentary population. However, cross-border flows of material assets and cross-border dynamics of social support are central to the experience of social protection in many peoples' lives, as highlighted by much literature on remittances and transnational care. Furthermore, international migration in the globalised society is intertwined with increased societal diversity. State provided social security and services are bound up with certain norms and expectations, not least with regard to family life and social relations across generations and between men and women. Increased diversity in the population challenges such assumptions immanent to

The tensions that emerge between varying degrees of sedentarism and mobility, and between different sets of norms, values and expectations, raise the need to better investigate the faceted nexus between international migration and social protection. An adequate research agenda should also take account of the typically disadvantaged position of immigrants in the social stratification of receiving societies, and of the relation between formal and informal social and economic support

National-populist parties in Sweden, Denmark, Norway and Finland.	Ideological transformations, organizational development and mainstream reactions. A comparison of populist parties in four Nordic countries / National- populist parties in Sweden, Denmark, Norway and Finland. 		in terms of electoral support, policy influence and experience between these parties? In order to answer this question, we focus on supply-side factors rather than merely focusing on the demand for anti-immigration parties. Firstly, we analyze the ideological transformations of these parties over time to discern to what extent they have converged in terms of influence, policy positioning and political rhetoric. Secondly, we focus on organizational development; hence, the internal life of the parties by means of analyses of party statutes and surveys among the middle-level party elite. Thirdly, we analyze the mainstream reactions to the development of these parties, ranging along a continuum from repressive to permissive of different political opportunity structures. Före och efter – Nya perspektiv på vidarebosatta flyktingars integrationsprocess/ Before and after - New perspectives on resettled refugees' integration process.	The project directs its focus on three areas of refugee life that impact on processes of integration after arrival in Sweden. The first part of the project is concerned with the time before resettlement, and as such looks at the educational opportunities and room for self-determination in the refugee camps. The second part investigates on the role	European Refugee Fund	2013-2015		Brigitte Suter, Malmö University; research assistant Karin Magnusson, Malmö University of social networks of resettled refugees in Sweden, and is thus interested in the organization, maintenance and characteristics of these networks with regard to integration in its broadest sense. Finally, the third part casts an eye on the patterns of mobility of resettled refugees within Sweden as well as across international borders. By exploring these three underresearched areas of resettled refugees' integration processes the project adds to the already existing knowledge that has been established by MIM's earlier project "Resettled and included? The employment integration of resettled refugees in Sweden" (2008-2010).

	The political integration of natives, minorities and immigrants	This research project aims at a better understanding of the political representation and participation of immigrants and ethnic minorities relative to natives and focuses on the selected EU countries of Sweden, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom in comparison to Canada. The selection of these countries is partly based on the different political and economic systems, immigration histories and data availability in these four countries. The political systems of the UK/Canada and the Netherlands/Sweden are somewhat similar, as are the migration histories of the Netherlands/UK. In economic respects the Netherlands/Sweden and the UK/Canada are more	Willy Brandt Fellowship	2008-

For Sweden and the Netherlands it is also possible to study the representation and participation of non-nationals.

First, the project uses the dataset to trace descriptively how different models of minority incorporation have evolved over time and became globally influential. Second, the project uses the dataset as dependent variables to examine which domestic and global factors have influenced constitutional change. The project's later stage is devoted to complementing the quantitative large-N analysis with qualitative case studies that examine in greater detail the transnational diffusion processes and domestic socio-legal contestations over ethnic, linguistic and religious diversity in particular moments of constitution-writing.

It focuses on the experiences of highly educated migrants from Turkey in three European countries: Spain, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom. The comparative perspective is geared to underscore the variance in policies and examine its repercussions for individual perceptions. This project highlights how the 'new' migration of highly educated Turkish citizens to Europe is endowed with a continuous notion of mobility that challenges conventional understandings of citizenship. However, it also shows the ways in which this mobility continues to be constrained by the nation-state and by public policies. Diversity and contact ('DivCon')		How are different kinds of diversity experienced in daily life, and what are the effects of such encounters?

		How does the socio-demographic and cultural diversity of societies affect the social interactions of individuals and groups within them? At the centre of this project, MPI-MMG has conducted a major longitudinal survey in 50 randomly selected urban neighbourhoods with various degrees of immigration-related diversity. Three waves of the survey have been conducted in 2010, 2011 and 2012 with 2500 respondents in the first wave. The survey is supplemented by systematic observations in the 50 neighbourhoods and a data base on their socio-demographic features. Targeted ethnographies and in-depth interviews in 5 selected neighbourhoods provide further evidence. Diversity and social identity complexity	The project examines how people negotiate their multiple identities in the context of (super-) diverse neighbourhoods. Within Social Psychology literature, the extent to which people integrate their multiple identities in a complex, differentiated and inclusive identity structure is referred to as social identity complexity. This project builds upon previous studies, but extends them in important ways. For instance, this project includes a minority perspective in order to examine in-depth the extent to which exposure to (super-)diverse contexts is linked with social identity complexity for both majority and ethnic minority members; in addition, the project addresses consequences of social identity complexity for a range of attitudes as well as

Ethno-religious diversity and social trust	This project critically evaluates and provides European comparison to Robert Putnam's recent American findings that areas with high ethnic diversity seem to manifest low levels of social trust. The project's objects are (1) to investigate the degree of trust that obtains in residential and educational areas of different ethnic mix, and how this is related to various types of intergroup contact; (2) to develop causal models of the associations between key, theoretically-identified variables; (3) to study the longitudinal impact of contact on outcomes in educational settings, and to plan and evaluate interventions to improve its effectiveness; and (4) to

GLOBALDIVERCI TIES - migration and new diversities in global cities. Comparatively conceiving, observing and visualizing diversification in urban public spaces	This project's core research question is: In public spaces compared across cities, what accounts for similarities and differences in social and spatial patterns that arise under conditions of diversification, when new diversity-meets-old diversity? The project entails comparative, interdisciplinary, multi-method research in three contexts of super-diversity: New York (a classic city of immigration with new global migrant flows in a broadly supportive political context), Singapore (dominated by racial-cultural politics, and wholly dependent on new, highly restricted migrants), and Johannesburg (emerging from Apartheid with tensions around unregulated new, pan-African migrant flows). In Kumkapi, she has been examining housing and home-making practices among these various groups as a lens for understanding the kinds of differences, such as ethnicity, gender, race and migration purpose, which inform use and perception of, and identification with space. Older migrants in Vienna: Aging and social relations		The research conducted in Vienna centres around the themes of urban diversity, migration and the lifecourse. It focuses on older migrants who have spent a great part of their lives in Vienna and who have retired or will retire soon. This research project aims to shed light on the still widely unexplored older migrant population, including not only the Yugoslav and Turkish Gastarbeiter, as is the focus of the small number of already existing studies, but also on those with different migration histories and places of birth. This research project explores the older migrants' social practices, particularly in their immediate surroundings, their neighbourhood, as well as imaginations and understandings of successful aging, which are expected to include a strong transnational dimension. Concerning social relations in the neighbourhood, I am particularly interested in the relations of the older established migrants with those who have migrated to Vienna more recently. Of particular interest are identities that cross-cut ethnic boundaries and bear the potential to link “old” and “new” migrants, e.g. the identity of being a labour migrant or a refugee.

	Picturing social encounters. Visual research of diversity in public space	During the last years visual methods and their application in field research gained more and more attention of international researchers. Methodological discussions started in different disciplines like cultural anthropology, sociology or geography. This thesis seeks to contribute to this body of work with reference to my fieldwork in Astoria, New York City. The doctorate project investigates following	MPI-MMG	2016	Anna Seegers-Krückeberg	Fieldwork in New York City within the research project of MPI-MMG „GLOBALDIVERCI TIES. What kind of content is transmitted through visual representations and documentations? Using multiple (visual) methods longstanding or fleeting encounters of migrants – interactions between friends, neighbors, colleagues and strangers – will be visualized and analyzed. This project combines a whole set of visual methods with ethnographic field methods to visualize and to analyze intercultural interaction: filming, guided tours, video feedback, photo elicitation, participatory photo/film elements, mappings (e.g. movement maps, mental maps), participatory observation and interviews. Pilot Study: Superdiversity and pathways to health care in four European countries	The recently developed concept of 'superdiversity' presents a new opportunity for understanding the politics of belonging in contemporary Europe. It presents an innovative perspective on social stratification and a new lens to look at migration-related ethnic diversity. Transcending previous theories of multiculturalism, it recognizes a level of socio-cultural-economic-legal complexity distinguished by a dynamic interplay of overlapping variables including country of origin (ethnicity, language, religious tradition, regional and local identities etc.), migration experience (often strongly		2015	Dr. Kristine Krause	Dr. Kristine Krause K.Krause@uva.nl / http://www.mmg.mpg.de/research/all-projects/pilot-study-superdiversity-and-pathways-to-health-care/related to gender, age, education, social networks, economic niches) and legal status (implying a wide variety of entitlements and restrictions). The aim of the project is to develop ways how to account better for this complexity in research about pathways to healthcare. The research results will inform an international, comparative research proposal.

Political institutions and the challenge of diversity	How do the political institutions and the political lives of countries, cities, and supranational units, reflect the diversity of their populations? What does an immigrant or an ethnic minority background mean for the ability to participate politically and to aspire to political power? While immigrants and their descendants are in many ways politically active, they are frequently – if foreign citizens - excluded from key political rights. 	Political parties and diversity at the local level: A comparison between Berlin and Paris	Due to the increasing diversity of western states social actors and institutions are confronted with new challenges. Political parties are for two reasons especially affected. Firstly, one of their central functions is the representation of citizens in the legislative bodies. Secondly, political parties play a critical role in the political incorporation of individuals as they are central in the decision-making process as regards to social, political and economic issues. Consequently, it can be asked how political parties cope with this diversity on the local level. With the help of a comparative case study, in Berlin and Paris, the project will investigate if and how challenges of diversity are being addressed by the main German and French popular parties in areas with a	MPI-MMG	2015	Daniel Volkert	Daniel Volkert volkert@mmg.mpg.de / http://www.mmg.mpg.de/research/all-projects/political-parties-and-diversity-at-the-local-level-a-comparison-between-berlin-and-paris/

Post-multicultural cities and the politics of diversity	The concept of diversity has been taken up by many European municipalities in recent years for marking a change in accommodating the settlement of migrants in the city. Local diversity policies are meant to address not only ethnic differences, but the intention is to create an integrated municipal approach towards differences based on ethnicity, gender, sexual orientation and disability. To date it is however unclear whether the aim is to activate individual talents to make society more productive or to continue pursuing equality of	MPI-MMG	2016	Dr. Maria Schiller		Dr. Maria Schiller schiller@mmg.mpg.de / http://www.mmg.mpg.de/research/all-projects/post-multicultural-cities-and-the-politics-of-diversity/

Specifically, it seeks to understand how the introduction of multi-partyism and subsequent regularization of political competition in the country impacts various communities' political calculus locally. The research focuses on a number of districts in Bolgatanga and Tamale, which exhibit high socio-cultural diversity: they are home to several ethno-linguistic groups who practice two main religions (Christianity and Islam), and a sizeable migrant population originally from neighboring Burkina Faso. In short, the project setting allows for the study of the local determinants of cross-ethnic or non-ethnic voting. Theoretically, the cases could highlight how a process leading to the long-term diminishing of the salience of ethnicity in developing multi-ethnic				http://www.mmmpg.de/research/all-projects/socio-cultural-diversity-and-political-issue-deliberation-in-northern-ghana/

A closely-related issue, which the project also seeks to address, is how political parties and local governments adapt to the new realities of co-ethnicity no longer being sufficient for communities' support. Does political competition give rise to more careful issue deliberation and improved government performance in such cases? How is the negative incentive of stoking ethnic grievances for votes avoided? In what ways are identities re-constituted in the process? The project relies on the collection and analysis of original constituency-level data in order to address the questions posed above. This includes interviews, focus group discussions and informal conversations with local government officials, party fonctionnaires, religious leaders, and traditional authority figures (chiefs and elders). 	Africa's cities	with a focus on Africa's cities. Africa is urbanizing rapidly and cities are the locus of these demographic shifts, heightened mobility and immobility. The research will investigate how the use and appropriation of mobile communication technologies reveals patterns of super-diversity in these increasingly networked cities. This project seeks to disrupt simplistic binaries and trace the intersectionalities of social mobility, ethnicity, gender, development, and evolving generations and evolving spatial re-configurations within Africa's cities. Fieldwork will take place in Lagos, Nigeria and the project will adopt a comparative dimension across communities within this city to reveal contested boundaries of governance and mobilization. The research project aims to enhance understanding of how in Africa's cities social,				.mpg.de/research/all-projects/super-diversity-urbanization-and-mobile-communication-technologies-in-africas-cities/

Utilizing innovative mobile methodologies, visual and digital mapping, interviews and archival research the research will advance a multi-dimensional understanding of super-diversity in Africa's cities.
Time experiences of uncertainty and aspiration among rural migrants in globalizing Shanghai	This project explores rural migrants' experiences of time in globalizing Shanghai. Before a period of rigid restrictions on migration from the 1960s to the 1980s, Shanghai had historically been a global commercial center attracting many internal and international migrants. Since the 1990s, Shanghai has been reconstructing itself into an emerging global city,	MPI-MMG	2016	Xiao He	Xiao He he@mmg.mpg.de / http://www.mmg.mpg.de/research/all-projects/time-experiences-of-uncertainty-and-aspiration-among-rural-migrants-in-globalizing-shanghai witnessing massive inflows of rural migrants and rapid urbanization. The central question of the project is twofold: how heightened social and economic uncertainties brought out by migration and urban transformations sharpen rural migrant's everyday experiences of time and how they enact their historically and culturally specific temporalities to deal with urban uncertainty, reclaim urban aspirations and forge new urban politics.				shanghai/

Transnational community life: Living apart, celebrating together, expanding social networks	This research project particularly concerns Purhépecha migrants living in Florida. While first migrants from the village started to move in the early 1990s, many have been 'temporary migrants' before they became settlers there. Therefore the research is directed to studying which kind of ties pass/transfer from one generation to another and what is happening to self-identification or sense of belonging of generations. The key question is whether transnational ties are regenerating from generation to generation or they do fade away and if they do, which kind of activities and engagements oriented towards the host society they are replaced by. Core issues to be addressed during the research are the following: • Transnational ties and activities among first and second generation		Chaloyan	chaloyan(at)mmg.mpg.de / http://www.mmg.mpg.de/research/all-projects/transnational-migrant-ties-social-formation-and-reproduction-among-armenians-in-germany/

QUESTIONNAIRE - EDUCATION AND RESEARCH IN THE NEW IMISCOE NETWORK

This questionnaire is being sent to you at the request of the IMISCOE Training Committee.

The data collected will serve to update the Training and Research Inventory of:

- Masters and PhD programmes organized by the IMISCOE members in the field of migration studies particularly during the Academic Year 2014-2015.
- Other current trainings targeting postgraduate students (summer or winter courses, continuing training) and prospective trainings in the field of migration.
- Current research projects on international migration and related issues.

The new Training and Research Inventory will be presented at the next annual conference in Geneva to the Board of Directors.

Please fill in it and send it back as soon as possible but before 15 March to e.mescoli@doct.ulg.ac.be

If you have any questions or queries, please contact Elsa Mescoli (CEDEM/University of Liège).

Thank you for your participation.

PART I – EDUCATION

This part is divided into 5 sections. Sections 1 to 4 consider the current academic year (2014-2015) and the last one targets the next academic year. You only need to respond to the sections which are relevant to you.

SECTION 1 – MASTERS IN MIGRATION STUDIES

If your university organizes a master in migration or related studies (diversity, ethnic or cultural studies, etc.), please describe it through the following grid.

1. Title of the Master programme
2. General and specific objectives
3. Admission criteria (qualifications or entry requirements to enroll in the Master programme)
4. ECTS (European Credit Transfer and Accumulation System)
5. Duration of the programme
6. Language(s) of instruction
7. Other specifications (evening course, ratio coursework/thesis in %)
8. Outside courses (Erasmus Mundus, ...)
9. Contact person(s) (name & address for further information)
10. Website (link to the page)
11. Comments

Please duplicate the grid and fill it in again if your university organizes more than one master programme in migration studies.

SECTION 2 – MASTERS WITH A MIGRATION STUDIES TRACK

If your university organizes a master in social sciences for example but with a track on migration or related studies (diversity, ethnic or cultural studies, etc.), please describe it in the following grid.

1. Title of the Master programme
2. General and specific objectives
3. Admission criteria (qualifications or entry requirements to enroll in the Masters programme)
4. ECTS (European Credit Transfer and Accumulation System)
5. Duration of the programme
6. Language(s) of instruction
7. Other specifications (evening course, ratio coursework/thesis in %)
8. Outside courses (Erasmus Mundus, ...)
9. Contact persons (name & address for further information)
10. Website (link to the page)
11. Comments

Please duplicate the grid and fill it in again if your university organizes more than one master in migration studies.

SECTION 3 – PHD PROGRAMMES

If your university organizes a PhD programme in migration or related studies (diversity, ethnic or cultural studies, etc.), please describe it below.

1. Title of the PhD programme
2. General and specific objectives
3. Admission criteria (what are the qualifications needed to enroll in the Master programme)
4. ECTS (European Credit Transfer and Accumulation System)
5. Duration of the programme (minimum & maximum duration)
6. Language(s) of instruction
7. Other specifications (specific courses, ECTS value; teaching activities required or allowed)
8. Outside courses (opportunity of co-supervision)
9. Contact persons (name & address for further information)
